CIRCUS DAYS OF OLD.

What Works of Art the Posters Seemed in Those Days.

Seemed in Those Days.

(Washington Star.)

"Yes." remarked the grizzled man with he frazzled stogle, "I'm going to the cirus—for a sure thing. Am going to take he wife and all the young ones. And in pite of that frayed, old gag, I'm not going to take 'em just to give myself an exuse to go, but because they want to go, not I want to take them. I don't have to ook up any excuse for going to the cirus. Never did have to. I go to circuses ecause I like to go to them, and I don't believe I ever met a fellow who went to hem for any other reason, or who ever ound it necessary to mentiont to me that the was only going 'to take the kids."

"Talking about the young ones and ciruses, though, I only got to thinking this norning, when I rode by a circus bill-loard—and, say, the circus bills now are ust about the same old lovely pieces of work that they always were, aren't they?

I got to thinking about how different he young ones of this day regard the ircus from the way they did when I was tad.

"Why, say, when I was a boy circus" their keepers' goads. We always made it a point to hang around the keepers of the commands on the chance, the dephants and cameled not be compared to the commands of the circus and cameled to rest his feet while at a circus.

Well, I'd like to have seen the boy of my date who needed to rest his feet while at a circus.

So do not of the keepers to 'pack water for the animals when the circus grounds were reached. I've nailed the water-lacking job for the elephants and camela on severage and the circus and camela on severage and the circus and so near the crest of society as if was possible for human beings to be, and no splendifferous princesses that I'd ever read or heard of were in it for a minute with the worn-looking women in the tinsel who rode in the parade on the backs of the elephants.

"I won't attempt to describe the delirious delight of visiting the show itself—and I notice that my boys don't appear to be particularly enthused over the interior of the big tent at that. It used to simply hold me spellbound, but durned if my boys don't kick if they haven't got some place to rest their feet while they're watching the ring show—rest their feet."

BIGGEST MAN IN THE WORLD.

Feodor Machow, the Russian Giant, is Seven Feet Nine.
